Fixed a bug where the application could not be closed.If you've been to our city of Cleveland, then you know the dead tree stump in front of City Hall. It's been there for a very long time, but on Tuesday, September 13, the stump received a new life as a trebuchet catapult. Yes, real life, science fiction. Actually the stump was born into a world of science fiction as staff from the Make-A-Wish Foundation was on hand to witness the birth. The site was kept a secret until it was time to reveal the plan: two people with a rope connecting their bodies -- one on top, one on the bottom -- would hurl a 400 pound stone at the tree stump. The stone, while not attached to them, would give the illusion of being alive. The stone is not a bottle rocket, so no worries there. It was made of concrete and reinforced with rebar. The stone also had the added benefit of being hollow. This allowed the two people to throw their bodies into a seated position, preventing them from falling. The total weight of the stone and four people amounted to about 750 pounds, but the pair managed to sling it about 350 feet. One person stepped on the rope to set the release mechanism and they were free-falling as their bodies catapulted the stone over the stump. The whole thing took about four and 09e8f5149f
