Ever noticed how the default UI of a Windows application looks really boring, not to mention very heavy and filled with cruft? On an average PC it can take a lot of RAM and CPU power to start up even the most popular games. Luckily, there's an easy way to make the interface of any program look just how you want it: hide all of the toolbars, dialog boxes, and other types of windows except the one you're currently using and replace the default Windows look and feel with something better suited for you. Winaero can handle most common tasks, but it's not really a full-blown skinning utility. Originally, it was released as a Mac OS X application, which has been made for the Ubuntu operating system. The Windows version, however, is a 32-bit application that lacks a lot of features. How to Install Winaero Winaero is available in both a 32-bit and a 64-bit version. However, only the 32-bit version can run on an Ubuntu operating system. Since 32-bit applications cannot be directly run on a 64-bit operating system, you need to get the 32-bit version and then install it on a 64-bit system. In the video above, we walk you through how to install Winaero on Ubuntu 16.04. Essentially, Winaero is a frontend for Gtk-Chtheme, which is the current Winaero's

On Jan. 31, 2005, the United States Navy SEALs teamed up with the CIA and other intelligence operatives to storm the compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan, and eliminate the world's most dangerous terrorist. Related As the SEALs moved in on bin Laden, a CIA team rappelled from a helicopter to "fix a communications problem," according to a recently released Congressional report. Minutes later, the SEALs spotted bin Laden through the walls, and their team leader gave the order to "attack and kill." In an attempt to get bin Laden, the SEALs tried to throw a smoke bomb into the compound. But before they could do so, bin Laden spotted them and fired an AK-47. A bullet ricocheted off the wall and killed SEAL Team Six member William "Ryan" Owens, and five other SEALs. Why was bin Laden able to spot them through the walls, from his secret home? It was the result of a decision made in 2004, when the CIA and the Defense Intelligence Agency began using a new technology to build a system to eavesdrop on cellular and satellite phone conversations in the Abbottabad compound. A previously unreported aspect of the technology was that it included a feature that allowed the U.S. to pinpoint the location of the phone within a building. The Bush administration was aware of the technology in 2004, but officials were reluctant to discuss it with The New York Times. The idea was to build the system with the ability to pinpoint the location of a phone within a certain building, but use it only in emergencies. When it was adopted, it became known as Cell Base Analytic for Scalable Network Intelligence (SCANI), which means it could be scaled to search through the calls of millions of people in the U.S. with a relatively simple process. U.S. officials have said that the system enabled them to listen in on the compound in Abbottabad because of the phone conversations of a senior al-Qaeda leader, Khalid Shaikh Mohammed. Mohammed is believed to have been in the center of the Sept 77a5ca646e

You might find yourself on the banks of the river Dorset, but you'll soon discover that the good-natured people who live on its banks are nothing like the sinister sand niggers of Aesop's fables. Where do you start? Here are some of the best places in Dorset to see the 'glorious' Dorset Paddler. Start at the Weymouth and Portland Tourist Board (wey.co.uk), where you'll find information about all of the other places that are worth visiting. Dawn patrol at Cranborne Chase To do The Dorset Paddler Dawn patrol on the River Wey This is the most popular sight in Dorset, with around 20,000 paddlers taking a spin on the Dorset Downs as dawn breaks. The good thing about going at this time is that there is usually a little more light, and paddlers on the river have the advantage of seeing a good proportion of the landscape and buildings
