[Effects of ultraviolet (UV)-B radiation and nitrogen supplement on the photosynthesis and soluble sugar contents in winter wheat]. To reveal the adaptive mechanism of winter wheat to ultraviolet (UV)-B radiation and nitrogen supplement, the field experiment was conducted in winter wheat in Shunyi region, Beijing, with a microplots design (randomized block design), and the data were analyzed by multi-factors (i.e., wavelength, dose, and time). The results showed that there was significant difference of photosynthetic rate (Pn), transpiration rate (Tr) and intercellular CO2 concentration (Ci) in winter wheat leaves under UV-B radiation. Compared with uv-CK (control), Pn, Tr and Ci decreased by 29.6%, 20.3% and 32.2%, respectively, at 4 hours after UV-B radiation (HAR). The contents of soluble sugar also decreased, with significant difference at 2 and 6 HAR. However, the photosynthetic rate, Tr and Ci showed little difference with the increase of nitrogen level. The main leaf soluble sugars in winter wheat under the condition of nitrogen supplement were sucrose and glucose, with the contents of 0.46% and 0.08% at 2 HAR, and 2.22% and 1.48% at 6 HAR., L. 939(1998) J.A.Morales, P.G.Lloyd, Phys.Rev.A 59, 960(1999) V.P.Mishra, T.R.Saraf and A.K.Pan, J.Mod.Phys. 8, 2403(1997) R.H.Garstang, Phys.Rev.
