Adobe Photoshop elements (such as Sketchbook Pro, FramePro, Design Premium, Creative Suite, Photoshop Lightroom, and the rest) are designed specifically to help novice photographers become more skilled in the process of retouching and editing photos, yet are still powerful enough to be used by seasoned professionals. Discovering the basics of editing with Photoshop provides a very powerful painting-type tool for changing image brightness and colors and removing unwanted objects from images. However, it has limitations, such as not being able to import a scanned image and not being able to let your audience see your image before you send it to them. The following sections demonstrate how to use Photoshop to perform basic image editing. Photoshop is an older program, and some of the functions are different from newer programs. If you have an older version of Photoshop, you can get up to speed by using the online help system for both an introduction and for more detailed explanations. Using the Image Browser and Layers to Work with Images The primary tool for working with images in Photoshop is the Image Browser. Photoshop's Image Browser enables you to scroll through the different layers of an image with different thumbnail previews and also play back the image as a slide show. To use the Image Browser, follow these steps: 1. Select the File menu and choose Open to open an image in Photoshop. The Open dialog box opens. 2. From the Open dialog box, navigate to the folder where the image you want to open is located and double-click the image. The image opens in Photoshop. 3. Click the View tab and click the Arrange button to place the image into the exact place you want in the composition you're creating. It's best to place the image into the composition using the View Control panel, as explained in the next few paragraphs. 4. Click the Image Control button to open the Image Control panel. The Image Control panel is a control panel that enables you to align images on a grid, zoom in on parts of an image, crop the image, flip or rotate it, and bring up another image, like your camera's Live View. 5. Click and drag the image to place it in the exact position you want. 6. Drag the image into the composition area. At this point, the image is cut off by the edges of the window. To see the entire image, click the Hand icon in the View

Q: Finding sum of multiple integers in a variable number of lists I am trying to find the sum of multiple integers that are taken from lists of varying lengths. Here is the code I have:
#!/usr/bin/python num_list = [] total = 0 #Iterates through the list of numbers for number in num_list: if number == 1: total += 1 elif number == 2: total += 2 elif number == 3: total += 3 elif number == 4: total += 4 else: pass print total This only works if each integer is in a separate list, for example num_list = [1,2,3,4] returns 6, but what if I want to access multiple integers from a varying number of lists, such as num_list = [[1,2,3,4,5,6], [7,8,9,10,11,12], [13,14,15,16,17,18],] How would I make the program find the total of the numbers from each list? A: Did you know you can easily flatten a list of lists using map?: >>> num_list = [[1,2,3,4], ... [7,8,9,10], ... [13,14,15,16]] >>> sum(map(sum, num_list)) 24 You should use a class to store the number and return it from the method, which will be easier to maintain and handle errors. Q: How can I install other Android market apps without root? Is it possible to install Android Market apps without being rooted? For example, I want to install the calendar app, but it requires root. Is there any way to "unroot" apps and install them in an Android market or in Google Play (or any other market)? I know there is
