Most of the information will be stored in the "LanguageUse:" row. For example, any information stored here will be available to all the other records within the app's database. If you set "SourceType" to "Object," "Location," or "Utility," the information will be stored in the row that corresponds to the location type you specified. For example, if you set "SourceType" to "Utility," the table might look like: If you've never assigned a type to your table, LanguageUse: will be set to "Default." Click Add Table > Oracle Database > Database. If you assigned a type for your language use table, move to the appropriate row and set the "SourceType" to the appropriate type you've chosen. If you don't see the type you need, click the down arrow in the row and select it. Within the "SourceType" column, you will see both "Default" and "Object," "Location," or "Utility": If you have a question about how you can use the language table to communicate between two or more parts of your application, you can also ask a question on AskMeETL: Comments If you set "SourceType" to "Object," "Location," or "Utility,"�
