Users are connecting to the server from different locations. What I want to do is to print the active file from a specific folder without overwriting previous files. For example: User A is editing page 5/1; user B is editing page 4/1. When I print the file, I want to print page 5/1 but not page 4/1, and if user A is not connected to server, the system should print the PDF from the folder with name 1. What is the easiest way to achieve this with PHP?

Thanks A: If you don't care about downgrading (i.e. if the edits are fast and rare and users always give back access to the data immediately after they edit it), a simple solution would be to delete the PDF file immediately after printing it. A custom bash script would be trivial to setup. On the other hand, if you do want to keep the user edits around (for example, if you'd like to have the last edited page there for the user to review, or maybe change), a more complex solution would be necessary, involving a database, something like the one described here. That solution would probably take a little more setup time, but would make it much easier to keep track of all of the edits.
