Is the oblique supination-external rotation stress fracture of the medial malleolus pathognomonic for intraarticular loose bodies? The purpose of this study is to report 3 cases of medial malleolar stress fracture where the oblique supination-external rotation (OSER) stress fracture pattern was pathognomonic for intraarticular loose bodies. Case series. Level I trauma center. Three patients with medial malleolar stress fracture were diagnosed with intraarticular loose bodies on magnetic resonance imaging. Case 1: A 30-year-old female participated in competitive alpine ski racing. Case 2: A 24-year-old female participated in a soccer match with direct impact to the medial malleolus. Case 3: A 28-year-old female participated in a roller derby match with direct impact to the medial malleolus. Oblique supination-external rotation stress fractures were pathognomonic for loose bodies. All three patients were treated with operative removal of loose bodies. Radiographic follow-up was available for all 3 patients at an average of 3.5 years (range, 2.3 to 6.7 years) following fixation of their OSER-pattern injuries. No osteonecrosis was observed. No malunion, nonunion, or redisplacement was noted in any case. Oblique supination-external rotation stress fractures are pathognomonic for loose bodies. Intraarticular loose bodies are a radiological finding in the athletes who present with OSER-pattern injuries of the medial malleolus and should be included in the differential diagnosis of medial malleolar stress fractures. This is from a meeting today where we discussed what to do with a storage deal. As you may know, the contract lets us use storage withdrawal/re-injection subject to FERC rules. We have received a letter from Sierra Pacific Power Company saying that our contracts that use these withdrawals/re-injections are in breach of Sierra Pacific's tariff. We can renegotiate to use withdrawals/re-injections to store gas in the market, so long as they are under the gas bill. However, there are restrictions on these withdrawals/ re-injections, including that the withdrawal/re-injection not exceed 30% of the injection, the withdrawal must be completed before 5pm, the storage

President Donald Trump's plan to build a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border is coming under increasing fire from political analysts and even his own aides. His campaign say he may be forced to cancel the promise of a wall as an election issue. They worry that the idea is hurting the president's chances with Latinos, a vital demographic. Opposition to the wall has even reached Republican party leadership. President Donald Trump's plan to build a wall on the U.S.-Mexico border is coming under increasing fire. His campaign say he may be forced to cancel the promise of a wall as an election issue. They worry that the idea is hurting the president's chances with Latinos, a vital demographic. Opposition to the wall has even reached Republican party leadership. The wall is almost a boast from the Trump campaign, a central promise of his presidential bid. "So important. We need the wall. We are going to have a wall. We need it more than ever," Trump said in his first public rally in Mexico City as he announced his candidacy in June 2015. He wants to construct a wall on the entire border. But four months into his presidency, the idea is running into growing resistance. Lobbyists for several major construction companies have started to warn that they may pull out of bidding on the project if the wall is taken too seriously. The contractors have released letters to the President, the White House, and the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, saying that the proposal is scaring them. And the President himself and his campaign are often getting blindsided by the effect of the wall. "I was as surprised as anyone that it came out. People thought it would be positive," a senior Trump adviser told Business Insider on Thursday. "And people are saying, 'Dude you better start having some thoughts about what you're going to do.' But that was not one of the primary reasons you were elected." "The wall was what the Trump campaign was like," the adviser said, adding that it was the "face" of the message about building a wall and about the campaign's commitment to border security. "We thought we had the wall. We really did." Business Insider previously reported that several top contractors that have government business – before and after Trump's inauguration – said that they are not willing to work with the White House on a project as large as the border wall
