Why did you come up with this high fantasy setting and story? I'm an adventure gamer and was attracted to the fantasy setting. I worked on the game as the CG director, overseeing the development of the world. This is the first title in a series planned to continue with trilogy, and I felt it was important to make the experience unique, and to feel I was creating something enjoyable. Also, though I've always enjoyed adventures, I've never seen the point in spending countless hours to gain a reputation standing to get a free level or a reward – which in a lot of RPGs is the only thing that truly connects you to your characters. It's always felt to me like I was playing something to get some key, but ultimately futile achievement.

What technologies did you use for Tarnished? Sqlite3 was the database. I wanted to keep the game to only a few hundred MB in size, so I created a database of about 500 MB that would be used during game play, and included a bunch of tables that were referenced by the game. When it was downsized to the length that I wanted, it seemed like a good time to check the database file, but the license to the creators wasn't clear.

How did you distribute Tarnished? When we released our first game in March of 2011, the sales were good. We released a patch that allowed it to be used on portable devices, and thankfully, it sold well for that reason. We also made an Android version, which went well. Most of our initial sales were from Japan. We chose Japan due to their demographic, well-known action games, and sales were relatively high compared to the U.S. & Europe.

So far, what's been the biggest challenge for working on Tarnished? Again, in terms of the production, we used G3D, a free2D framework. We had some of that work done while the title was in beta testing, and one of the things that we experienced early on was feeling limited, in terms of what we could do, and how much horsepower the game could use.

Why did you choose the Android platform? Having worked on other titles for Android, it felt like it was developed for a small market that we have yet to tap into

I want to create a timeout loop and I have been looking around but I can't find any good tutorials on it. I am trying to create a timeout loop that will multiply a character every 0.5 seconds until the number you entered in the textbox matches the words you had in the messages and displays how long it takes for this to happen. Example: You enter the following in a textbox: Enter a character: 4 Messages that you have to find a match in are: One Two Three Four Now the program will say: You enter the following in a textbox: 4 Messages that you have to find a match in are: One Two Three Four Now the program will say: You enter the following in a textbox: 4 Messages that you have to find a match in are: One Two Three Four Now the program will say: You enter the following in a textbox: 4 Messages that you have to find a match in are: One Two Three Four And now it should say you entered the following in a textbox: 0.5 Messages that you have to find a match in are: One Two Three Four Then it should stop. A loop that does this is too big for me to figure out and I am looking for a tutorial. I have searched Google for a couple of hours and can't find a good place. Please help! Thank you!
