Story: A Pokémon game? Hasn't that been done? Let's have a look at a few different ways you can play Pokémon X: Game 1 is a more traditional Pokémon experience with the main changes being that, in Game 1, players can earn up to eight Pokémon at once, catch one with an egg for a second Pokémon in the party, and they can choose one of three Fire and/or Electric types. Game 2 takes place on the second generation of Pokémon: the 8th generation of the series. There are still eight available Pokémon, but you can only catch one at once. There's no egg moving into the party. However, you can evolve two of them and eight different types of Pokémon evolve from your existing Pokémon. There are also Pokémon of three different types that evolve in tandem, which means that if you start out with a Fire and an Electric-type Pokémon, you could evolve the Fire-type Pokémon in the middle of the game and the third and last evolved Pokémon will be Electric. There are some more things to note about this experience, including: Team Up with friends to fight against fierce Gym Leaders and gain Gym Badges to earn unique rewards and title cards. Change teams and play the full game with six different teams. Explore the Kalos region with the new Pokémon hunting GPS, PokéNav. Discover many more Pokémon including legendary

Pokémon and Pokémon that cannot be caught through traditional means like breeding or by receiving a lucky Pokémon from an event. Players can also bring their fully evolved Pokémon from Pokémon Omega Ruby and Pokémon Alpha Sapphire, including the legendary Pokémon. But of course, you'll have to battle the Legendary Pokémon to get them back. The main difference between Game 2 and Game 1 is that there is no egg. If you wanted to play Game 3, you would have to first play Game 1, then complete the main Game 2. This is because, as explained above, in Game 2, you can only catch one Pokémon at a time. So if you were to try to catch your Pokémon for a second time while the first was in your party, it would be one of eight Pokémon in the first game, none in the second. The main differences between Game 3 and Game 1 are that the battles are longer (10x the number of turns in battles versus 1x), and there's no "event Pokémon". This is one of the main differences between Game Released: September, 2015. Platforms: Windows, Mac.

Developer: X1 Studio Publisher: X1 Studio Genre: Platform, Puzzle, Simulation Players: 1 Lost Keys will challenge players' memory. The first mission begins by warning the player not to trust the memory they have in their head. The campaign is represented as a series of puzzles which become more and more difficult as it progresses. At the beginning of the game the user will only be able to use one key on one level of the map. Visuals Lost Keys The presentation of the game is very well done. The levels are designed to draw you in and you are able to zoom in and out freely. The interface is easy to use. The tutorial explains how everything works and how to complete the game. The menu has a range of options which give you the opportunity to customize the game. The controls are simple and logical. The keyboard arrows let you navigate and to choose a key, while the mouse lets you drag the key. The graphics are the most important feature of Lost Keys and they're very good. The first level of the game begins on a map of the Moon, there are several objects and characters visible on the screen, and the levels are colored. The graphics are based on realism and have realistic patterns, shades and effects. Each level is designed with a focus on music. Each level has its own unique style. The music is even used as a hint when you find a key or when you activate a level. Each level ends with a small sound effect, which always serves as a reminder of where you are. Sound Lost Keys Lost Keys is designed with sound. As I said before, each level begins with a musical intro. If you're lucky, the level will have its own theme music. Each level's intro has a specific style. When you activate a level the music becomes a lot more dramatic and exciting. Each level is different from the others and the variety of the music is incredible. Sound Lost Keys The music gives the player an indicator of the current level. The music gets louder and louder as the game goes on. The music can be used to help you solve a puzzle, to find a key or to pass to the next level. There are 12 levels of Lost Keys which all have their own original soundtrack. Key Lost Keys The keyboard keyboard will help you to solve each puzzle. Each

A warning all about location based social media which means more threats than you think. The challenge of social media (and location based social media) is that you can share information about yourself in public but you have no idea who might be listening to your post in real time via their social network (ie my Facebook page). If you share a picture of your morning coffee while visiting the beach with 100,000 people and I'm sitting in the Tahiti as the sun makes its way up towards the top of the horizon and I see it first on my Facebook page, are you satisfied? So far, you could've covered four beach sales as I could have posted or tweeted the morning coffee without ever even touching it. I liked the coffee from the correlation from [your Facebook user ID] to the coffee shop. If I live in some remote city with a population under 10,000, do you feel safe sharing anything? Good social media has location based security. If everyone in your area see a post about a Sunday morning walk to the town square, eventually some miscreant will also be heading for the square. I was buying steaks this weekend and enjoyed a business deal at a public place in Atlanta and a couple at Starbucks at the downtown Summerhill Square. How safe is that for you? If you have ever taken a test drive home from an auto parts store, you may have been approached by a muscle car guy or gal who wants you to drive their vehicle for a test drive. If I have a photo of a vehicle with a website paid from a Facebook ad in my feed, am I a much more likely customer than someone sitting on a bar stool drinking a $5 draft beer? Events are the same thing. If I hear of an event near a city or county I work or live in, my next step is to share the event on Facebook. Now anyone in my social network could be there or have heard of the event through their friends. So how safe is that for me? The answer is a bad one. I will give you a reason to guess a nonrandom number between 1 and the maximum number of friends you have. If you guess my number, I will agree I am looking for an event but I will also one-up and tell you, “If I were looking for an event that no one else would know about, it would be a great time to find out if event locators can find it for me.”
