Each monochromatic light source that produces these wavelengths is referred to as a primary source, and their combination is referred to as a primary system. The color of the primary system is perceived as a white light by the human eye. As discussed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,904,445, white light that is composed of a set of primary monochromatic sources can be generated by a combination of two primary sources that are spatially separated from one another. White light that is generated by the approach disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,904,445 has a high degree of reproducibility due to the fact that the two primary sources are operated to generate white light at the same time. A disadvantage of this prior art approach, however, is that the two primary sources must be operated synchronously, at least in terms of the appearance of the primary sources to the viewer.The present invention relates to a method for replacing air in a tyre mounted on a vehicle. According to figures from Markit published overnight, the UK's services sector fell into decline for the first time in 12 months, although the performance was not as bad as the one in Ireland, which is also in the grip of an economic slump. The Markit/CIPS purchasing managers index stood at 49.3 in March, a nine-month low, compared with March 2010, when it was 52.1. Economists expect the figure to rise to about 50 in April. A similar reading for the services sector of the UK as a whole was published on Wednesday by the Office for National Statistics, with a score of 49.1. That was also the worst reading on record for the sector and came after a modest fall of 0.2 percentage points in February. Since the start of 2009, the economy has shrunk by almost 6%, forcing George Osborne to be more worried about a possible double-dip recession in the UK than a similar slide in the euro zone. The chancellor, in an interview with The Observer this week, said a slide in the euro zone was a major threat to Britain's economy but was not concerned about the UK's performance, saying it was going in the right direction. Following up on that theme today, George Osborne said: "We all know that the position in the euro zone is problematic. It is dragging a significant part of the economy into a recession. That is a very serious matter. In the UK, the underlying fundamentals of the economy are growing - both private and public demand are strong - and that is why d41b202975
