I am trying to accomplish something that I have not been able to after googling a bit. This is what I need to accomplish: I have a user control in a window, and I have given it a backing field, that is private: private string currentText; I want the text in that control to be set to a default value inside a binding that uses an MVVM pattern. I have tried using bindings with converters or ValueConverter, but nothing seems to work. When I have tried to bind to that field, the control complains about it being a read-only field. I also can't give it a default value (it seems to not allow even putting it in the XAML), and I cannot seem to find any way of "registering" or "initializing" it somehow so that it can bind to it (for example, InitializeComponent() will not work). I realize that this is not possible to do in the current version of WPF, but

Here is how they look like: Tag 1 Tag 2 Tag 3 Tag 1 Tag 2 Tag 3 So far it looks ok, but what I really need is this: When I visit the page with HTML form and I don't select anything, I want to show second select and hide first select. And second - when I select a value from the first select menu, the second select menu should show only first option that was selected in the first one. Thanks for all kind help. A: First, use css, not javascript to set your selects display property. Second, you can do it with a radio button. Tag 1 Tag 2 Tag 3 If you want more than one option, you can do something like this: Tag 1 Tag 2
