Thundering Skies is a shoot 'em up inspired by the 16-bit classics of the genre. Making an appearance are the obligatory fire and ice-themed levels, giant battleships, scratchy voice samples, huge bosses and overpowered weapons that make you feel naked when you lose them - as well some less expected features. Features: - Intuitive controls with feedback and progression - Beautiful pixel art and music - 6 game modes - 4 difficulty levels, including an introductory mode - 10 Steam Achievements - Challenging bosses and minibosses - Online scoreboard and leaderboard - Adjustable scanlines for that lovely CRT effect Follow the outrageous action in Thundering Skies, where all sorts of bizarre and outrageous things happen!Q: How to make Vim work well with "smart" cursor key bindings? I found that both Vim and Emacs has some smart-cursor features that disables the default behavior of certain key combination. For example, in Emacs, pressing Meta + Arrow moves to the next mark. But in Vim, pressing Meta + Arrow will spacefaring races to alien beings with curious, innovative societies. What you do matters, because the stars are no longer the final frontier. For the first time, you could be the one who ventures beyond the stars. So about twenty years back I had this call from a friend of mine who had gotten hooked on the first Starfinder game. I was a DM and had done a pretty good job of running his campaign. So after one of those run-down years (I still have my notes) I asked if he wanted to do something different. He said "Yeah, I don't want to play any more" haha. Now I had actually gone through a run-down period myself, and I had gotten a bit off my original game (I'd been the DM on-and-off for a few years by this point) and there were a lot of shortcomings. But I really didn't want to have the two of us get off on a bad note. So I set to work on a new one. I didn't want to put a whole new campaign together, so when I sat down I had a small group of five of friends that he didn't know. I moved the game to the present day, and we kicked around some ideas. So on it was, Starfinder Apocalypse had begun. I think we all had pretty good ideas for the campaign going forward (maybe not the craziest concepts, but several good ideas). Then one of the guys who was about to graduate college mentioned he was going to be taking a large number of astronomy and astronomy related courses for his degree. He was looking into "exploring the galaxy" as a career, and the stars were definitely a part of that. I put some of my old notes together and we started playing. It turned out pretty well. He liked the game enough that when he started grad school he invited the people he was close to in the group, and me. Pretty soon the other five were there too. As you can imagine, we had a lot of fun. I had some fun with the setting, and some fun with a few of the stats. There's c9d1549cdd
