[The immunogenicity of plasmid DNA encoding HBsAg vaccine is enhanced by a mixture of helper molecules]. The immunogenicity of pDNA encoding hepatitis B surface antigen (HBsAg) was enhanced by a mixture of helper molecules, such as polyethylene glycol (PEG)-6000 and nuclease. PEG-6000 was added into pDNA solution to swell the DNA into microparticles, which were further incubated with nuclease to expose the DNA ends. Then, the mixture was injected intramuscularly into BALB/c mice. After boosting immunization, the serum anti-HBsAg antibody titer and lymphocytes proliferation in the splenocyte were determined. The results showed that the expression of HBsAg was significantly increased in the group treated with PEG-6000 and nuclease. The expression was almost eliminated in the group treated with PEG-6000 and nuclease without DNA. Furthermore, the humoral immune responses were dramatically enhanced as compared to those observed with pDNA encoding HBsAg alone. The immune enhancement was related to the rate of uptake of pDNA by the cells, and the overall length of the pDNA. The mixture of PEG-6000 and nuclease could enhance immunogenicity of pDNA encoding HBsAg in vivo.
