In general, a camera is used in a dark environment for a long time. Hence, even if no matter of image is damaged in the image generated in the beginning, the image is finally damaged in a long-term use. In the meantime, for the camera, various digital image processing techniques such as a high-resolution, high-definition, high-speed shooting, and high-pixel-number shooting have been further developed. At the present time, the digital image processing technique is very popular, and the digital camera itself is further advanced. Further, the digital camera has a higher quality, which is more resistant to the deterioration of the image than the film. In addition, since the digital camera has such advantages, the digital camera is replacing the film camera. The digital camera is being gradually popularized, and the digital camera is coming to be marketed in various sizes and forms. In the digital camera, an object image (image of an object) is photo-electrically converted to generate image information. Then, an image may be output to a display such as a liquid crystal display or a CRT to make the image recognizable to a user. In this way, the display, or a display integrated with a camera, is generally used as an external display. A camera having both the display and the battery is disclosed in JP-A-10-224516, for example. Moreover, it is becoming more popular to use a lens-attached camera instead of a camera that does not have a lens as a camera.

Micropumps are useful in a wide variety of devices. For example, micropumps can be used in portable electronics as well as in large scale systems such as manufacturing facilities. For example, micropumps may be used for sample delivery in biotechnology, as well as high throughput screening for drug discovery. Additionally, micropumps have been employed for micro-machining and micro-dispensing applications. In general, a micropump creates a flow of a fluid in a microfluidic channel. For example, a micropump can be used to transport fluids from one channel to another channel.
