 -- a very pretty, hand-drawn game in which you scramble to survive Survival RPG: The Lost Treasure is a very pretty, hand-drawn game in which you scramble to survive Ah, Survival RPG. Remember those? You know, the video games that transported young minds to a prehistoric world of danger, peril and pastel colors? Everyone I know used to play them, and they remain perpetually trapped in my youth. They're the first thing that springs to mind whenever I hear the phrase'survival game.' I suppose that's because they were among the first to try and portray the danger and peril of living through a harsh-yet-sunny world, using paisley, unkempt characters and goofy characters to transport players to a world that resembles its own reflection. Survival RPG is just one of the most perfectSurvival games. Maybe it will come out on iPhone/iPod as well. Advertisement Anyway, The Lost Treasure is exactly that. It looks like it was done with a little more care than the cheaper Survival RPG, and the characters look quite a bit nicer (to be kind; they're still not Avatar-level), so it's a graphics-focused game. Let's have a look. First, you'll need to pick your class. You have three classes to choose from: Hunter: What do you hunt? The Hunter class hunts wild animals. Pioneer: Are you brave? The Pioneer class can explore terrains, carry large loads and build dwellings. Tamer: Are you strong? The Tamer class can gain the trust of animals. These might seem somewhat boring, until you actually get into them, as you explore a world in which you encounter varied wildlife, including robots (who obey your every command, apparently). When you want to build a shelter (to hunt, pillage and relax) you simply select a nearby spot on the top of a hill. You place a cube on it and select either Hunter, Pioneer or Tamer. When you do this, your class will spend two-thirds of their health on the hill (that is, the hill will drain half your health). As you dig a hole to set up your shelter, you can set objects on your way up. You should let those objects pile up, as they accumulate to stuff into a box, and for some reason this adds supplies to you (this is, again, a bit of a mystery). So you'll usually

Interstate Drifter 1999 is a game that puts the driver in his one-man minivans, trucks, busses, and/or other multi-passenger vehicles. Development & Description Interstate Drifter 1999 is an arcade-style driving game made in the late 80's. There are three game play modes: 2 player split screen (each player on a different LCD screen), 4 player tournament, and a single player mode. Each vehicle has one, single, realtime controlled speed. The vehicles can be controlled manually by the player with either of the following keys: mouse or a joypad. Also, the player can choose his turn speed from one of three speeds: slow, medium, and fast. Also, the player can travel in two opposite lanes at a time; in the other two other lanes there is nothing to do. If the player wants to cross over the lanes which are not controlled by him, he must pay a penalty. Roads There are more than 100 different road types. From asphalt to sand, from concrete to dirt, no matter if it's paved or unpaved: it's all possible! Road construction workers are present, repairing or building roads during gameplay. The player can avoid road construction areas by paying a repair fee or by passing them. The player can also choose a shorter route for a faster time. With either of the three single-player game play modes (Tournament, singles, and control panel), the player travels along an original road map. Depending on the control panel the player uses, different maps can be selected, such as continental USA or the USA-crossing Interstate Highway System. There are a lot of different cities to visit during the gameplay. If the player visits a city too much and the road map is changed, a new route will appear in the map. Only three cities are offered to the player as a starter: Phoenix, Las Vegas, and Los Angeles. More than one city can be visited during the game. Game Modes & Progress The tournament mode is, in comparison to the other two modes, the most interactive. During the course of a tournament, the player encounters continuously new rivals in a 8 player rotating tournament. Every time the player loses, the player is either knocked out of the tournament or out of the race. For each round, the competition picks one of the three control modes and the ranking goes up to 10
