Developed by: Freebird Games, LLC is a new small game developer based in Dallas, Texas. The team consists of two developers for the game, Bluejay and Will. Together they are responsible for the creation of The Dope Game, and the expansion DLC's: The Most Dangerous Game, Space Ghost, and Rioters. Bluejay is the primary developer, but both have been creating games since high school. Freebird Games has developed games for the Game Boy Advance, Nintendo DS, Wii, and Flash. The Dope Game is a 3D third-person action/RPG. You play as a kid named Mike and you must grow up and escape a governmental orphanage being used as a drug lab. Mixing traditional features and gameplay techniques such as Diablo III, Final Fantasy, and Metal Gear Solid, the game contains a story that matches the best elements of the classics, while also featuring some of the newest. The goal is to have the player change into a grown man and escape the lab. Since it is set in the "future", you must find weapons and other things that can be used in the present. Your character's name is your nickname, allowing the player to change the appearance of the character at any time. This allows you to go from a'retarded kid' to a'super hero','sci-fi character', or the 'the best looking barber in the world' if you desire. You can also create your own unique character that reflects your taste. You must deal with internal and external conflicts that will push you to the limits of your character's abilities. Please enjoy the game or download it and try it! Thank you for your time. - Freebird Games, LLC Treatment of

What's new:

Alice Cook should not have been surprised by her grandmother's characteristic rudeness. She figured her grandmother would do the unexpected - and Miss Grace Stinson was good at that. But there she was, scrambling to a chair and snatching the yelp of a pain-wracked toddler from Grace's hands. She had heard the news about the men in black and Alice: the flutter of her heart stopped. Grace Stinson was in trouble. Mischief was always best when mixed in with cow manure, Alice used to believe. At age 24, Alice used misdirection to hide her cigarette habit from her grandmother. It seemed to work until Grace's nosiness got the better of her and she called to check on Alice in her room. Inside, Alice was dismayed by the little shrine on her bedside table. Long-dead nun pictures and a medal Grace had given her for being a virgin had never bothered Alice before. Now, the inanity of the shrine set off a fear in her. "Who are all these people, Grandma?" Alice asked, disobeying Grace's unspoken order to just cry. It was a closed circle, the four sisters and their four children on one end and Grace Stinson on the other. "Sisters of the Strawberry Mambo, and I'm not talking about the Mambo Brothers," Grace said harshly. "Oh," said Alice. "You mean the dancers." But Grace just looked at her with the withering condescension she expected from her favorite granddaughter. "I'm sorry, Grace, I didn't mean that," Alice persisted. "Yes you did," Grace said. "You know what Sister Esther has told me over and over again? How you're going to be a nun." "I am not," said Alice. "Yes, you are. You're hearing Mass three times a week; the newspapers say so."

“Coaching a soccer team is not hearing Mass,” said Alice. And she resisted the urge to burst out laughing. “I never said I was going to a convent.” “You were overheard by one of the gentlemen we received a letter about.” ♦
