were associated with percent body fat and intra-abdominal adipose tissue (IAAT) amount in Japanese men with type 2 diabetes (T2DM). We studied 51 Japanese men with T2DM and 25 normal non-diabetic Japanese men. Serum leptin and plasma adiponectin were measured using specific RIA kits.

We also measured leptin receptor expression and leptin content in adipose tissue. Percent body fat and IAAT amount were also measured by bioelectrical impedance. Leptin and adiponectin levels were lower in the T2DM group. Leptin receptor expression and leptin content in adipose tissue was also lower in T2DM. Serum leptin and leptin content in adipose tissue was negatively correlated with percent body fat and IAAT amount. These data suggest that leptin is inversely associated with the amount of body fat and IAAT in Japanese men with T2DM. Prevalence and predictors of poor sleep quality in people with acute myocardial infarction. Sleep deprivation is common in patients with acute myocardial infarction (AMI). We examined the prevalence of poor sleep quality in AMI patients. To explore the potential risk factors for poor sleep quality in these patients.

We also examined the impact of poor sleep quality on the recovery of the patients. This is a prospective cross-sectional study of AMI patients admitted to Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Adelaide, South Australia, from January to June 2016. Patients completed the Pittsburgh Sleep Quality Index, Hospital Anxiety and Depression Scale, and the General Well-Being Inventory to measure sleep quality, anxiety and depression, and general well-being. To measure functional outcome, the Seattle Angina Questionnaire was used to assess health-related quality of life.
