at the Canadian Motorcycle Hall of Fame Unlock the doors of Canadian motorcycle history and discover why the Canadian Motorcycle Hall of Fame has had 230,000 visitors since August 2000. It's a historic picture which takes you back in time. Maurice Scalak is sitting pretty: a relaxed look in repose. Whether it's his smiling face or his familiar moustache, nothing appears to inhibit this image of "Old Man Scalak." For more than 80 years, the scalpel-like photography has captured a friendship between the faces of people on mopeds, motorcycles, bicycles and motor scooters, and the pictures have been exhibited at the University of British Columbia Museum in Vancouver and the Canadian Museum of History in Ottawa. In 1967, Maurice Scalak grabbed his camera and took the portable self-portrait which now hangs in the gallery. "It was never meant to be displayed," says Galleries and Special Collections archivist, Lesleigh Smith. Scalak was 35 when he took the image as a favour to his longtime friend, the man on the handlebars. Angelo Ciottone's story is now retold in Maurice Scalak, a crowdfunding campaign by the University of British Columbia Press. It was 1953 and Angelo Ciottone had earned a reputation as the best all-around motorcycle road racer in Montreal, pedalling for Team Canada. Ciottone was averaging more than 90 points a season at the national championship, earning several first and second place finishes. On Dec. 18, 1953, he was closing in on the lead when he crashed out of the Mâcon-Saint-Nomel race at a section called Avalines Pass near Aubigny, France. Ciottone had ridden down the steep pass facing away from the finish, and was unable to apply the brakes as he entered a tight curve. The boyish-looking racing machine turned over on the road surface, and gears and engine crunched off. As Ciottone's bike flipped over, his legs were trapped. Ciottone, riding without a safety device, must have been thrown over the handlebars. "Nothing was recovered," Smith says. "And very simply, things don't tend to be recovered from crashes on roads like these." As time went on, Ciottone was forgotten. Street racers of the era went days, weeks, even months without an accident. There were no emergency services at all. There were no ambulances

Thank you, DanielDoes Amlodipine Always Alters the Pattern of Coronary Flow Reserve in Acute Myocardial Infarction? Delayed or abnormal flow after coronary occlusion, is a result of arterial constriction mediated by the block of voltage-gated sodium channels and reactive hyperemia due to arteriovenous shunting. Either permanent or reversible arterial constriction may lead to different flow patterns. The purpose of this study is to investigate the relation between the pattern of coronary flow reserve (CFR) and infarct size (IS) in patients with acute myocardial infarction (AMI) after being treated with amlodipine. The study included 70 patients with ST segment elevation AMI. They were divided into two groups: without (group I) (n=50) and with prolonged (group II) (n=20) CFR to assess the relation of CFR with IS. CFR was measured at baseline and 10 min after administration of amlodipine using intracoronary Doppler wire. IS was also measured by using myocardial contrast echocardiography after 6-9 days of hospitalization. In group I, CFR was prolonged to more than 2.0 in all patients. In the group II, CFR was prolonged to more than 2.0 in 9 patients. IS was significantly lower in group I compared with group II (IS: 24 ± 12 versus 38 ± 22 , $p=0.000$). CFR in the group II was negatively correlated with IS ($r=-0.735$, $p=0.000$). There were significant differences between baseline CFR and CFR of 10 min after administration of amlodipine in group I (1.53 ± 0.46 versus 2).
