Microsoft's new Edge browser for PCs and Android phones launched in beta Tuesday with two key features not found in the most recent version of Chrome: customizable speed dials and the ability to open multiple tabs in the background. The browser comes with a new interface in which speed dials offer three tabs of information: full name, email and number. But you can also choose to see the name of each person, only their email address or just their phone number. Microsoft Edge is free for users of Windows 10 or Windows 10 Mobile devices. It will also arrive in the U.S. as an option on Windows Phone 8.1 and Windows Phone 8 devices, in addition to Windows 10 Mobile. RELATED: Microsoft Edge is a web browser you can trust, says Google (Image: Microsoft) Just like Chrome, Edge also features a built-in ad blocker that blocks pop-ups and other annoyances. But Edge doesn't limit ad content to one tab, like Chrome does. Instead, you can have a pop-up ad open in an other tab and have your other active tabs
