Cytomegalovirus in the brain of children with myelomeningocele. Central nervous system (CNS) involvement in children with myelomeningocele (MMC) is common and can be severe. Cytomegalovirus (CMV) infection of the CNS is a common infectious cause of CNS infection in this population. The frequency of CMV infection in the CNS in children with MMC is unknown. The purpose of this study was to determine the incidence of CMV infection of the CNS in children with MMC. A retrospective study of cerebrospinal fluid (CSF) obtained by lumbar puncture or cisterna magna placement was conducted. The CSF was analyzed for CMV by polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and culture. Thirty-four of 54 patients tested had a positive test for CMV. The median number of CMV genome copies per microliter was 4,052. The median age at testing was 4.0 years (range, 0.7-13.8 years). Children with MMC have a higher incidence of CMV infection in the CNS than is reported in the general pediatric population (3.6% v. 0.9%). The implications of these findings are discussed. 1. Technical Field The present invention relates to a refrigerant for an automobile air-conditioning system that serves as a heat source for an air-conditioning apparatus and a method of manufacturing the refrigerant. 2.
