Moe Sciancalepore, the director of research at the Center for the Study of Commercialism in Medicine and Health, authored “License to Kill: The Grim Realities Behind the 'Patient Protection' and Risk Disclaimer.” In the book, Sciancalepore illustrates how the risk-disclaimer actually puts doctors and patients at a greater risk. After completing a significant amount of research on the process, he discovered a very disturbing correlation between the PAS system and the number of medical-related products sold. While the PAS system does free doctors from moral constraints, the country is experiencing an epidemic of “deadly medical products,” like ventilators and laryngoscope blades that pose serious risks to patients and doctors alike. Licenses to Kill explores this larger picture, while focusing on how the commercialization of healthcare has a direct impact on patient outcomes and even the practice of medicine. Sciancalepore details the impact of drug and medical device companies on physicians to incentivize prescribing and provides examples of risk-disclaimers on drugs that cause physical harm, not always accurately demonstrating the clinical significance of the risks they pose. He concludes that the PAS system is a critical part of an overall change in medical culture that is more focused on promoting drug sales and less concerned with public health. In addition to a strong, academic research background, Sciancalepore holds a J.D. from the University of Michigan Law School and is a former faculty member at the University of Chicago Law School. He is the author of the book “Digitalism: The End of Capitalism or The Rise of Postcapitalism?” Moe Sciancalepore, the director of research at the Center for the Study of Commercialism in Medicine and Health, authored “License to Kill: The Grim Realities Behind the 'Patient Protection' and Risk Disclaimer.” In the book, Sciancalepore illustrates how the risk-disclaimer actually puts doctors and patients at a greater risk.
