To determine whether transvaginal immediate preconditioning (TIPC) is effective and safe in the protection of uterine sensitivity and development of new clots, with a focus on changes in caspase-3 gene expression in sheep myometrium. Prospective randomized experimental animal study. Large animal model. Twenty-four nulliparous Suffolk ewes. Sheep uteri were randomly allocated to control (n = 6), TIPC (n = 6), sham TIPC (n = 6), and laparotomy-ligated group (n = 6) groups and treated for 2 hrs. TIPC and sham TIPC were performed by dividing myometrial strips of uterus into left and right halves to deliver ischaemic preconditioning via intravaginal catheter during the ischaemia. We induced ischaemia-reperfusion injury in control group via uterine arterial occlusion. After uterine ischaemia, blood samples were taken for ischaemia-modified albumin. At the end of the ischaemia, vaginally placed catheter was carefully removed to determine ischaemia time. Myometrial tissue was taken immediately after the treatment for the assessment of necrotic and apoptotic fractions, and caspase-3 gene expression and enzyme activity. Data are presented as means \pm SD, and statistical significance was determined by one-way analysis of variance followed by Tukey's multiple comparisons test. TIPC significantly reduced ischaemia time as well as necrotic and apoptotic fractions. The levels of caspase-3 enzyme activity were decreased significantly. TIPC can be used safely for the protection of uterine sensitivity and development of new clots. It has the potential for clinical application in alleviating postpartum morbidity in women.Q: How to set dimension type in SQL Server? I need to set the DIM_TYPE to the integer data type.
