Today, the Voula Center and the Glickenhau Pentadrive24, the world's first 24-inch hybrid-electric supercar with a battery pack in the engine compartment, unveil two new concept cars that demonstrate the medium- and long-term benefits of a new concept: reducing emissions and providing a cleaner, quieter environment. Meeting the biggest global challenge The Voula Center is part of the Greek Ministry of the Environment. Its job is to research and improve methods for effectively reducing the amount of air pollution produced by traffic across Greece's traffic grid. The Voula Center envisions an integrated, holistic solution for a greener environment, which is one of the biggest challenges our society faces. Through its many projects, which include the design of an electric bus for the Athens Rapid Transit Organization, the Center has proven that it is feasible to transport vehicles and people in a more green and environmentally friendly way. Vehicle travel makes up almost one-quarter of the total amount of airborne pollutants in most major cities around the world, especially in the Mediterranean area. The Center has produced and tested many different vehicle technologies and safety innovations. The 2014 Voula Center vehicles and technologies are one of the largest ever being developed, tested, and implemented by any organization or government. The next step One of the main projects of the Voula Center is the development of the city bus and the development of an advanced vehicle electrification technology. After the successful implementation of the first battery-driven city bus, the Voula Center is advancing to the next step. The vehicle will be equipped with a battery pack in the engine compartment. This concept also applies to the development of an advanced vehicle electrification technology. The air pollution problem Air pollution caused by transport is one of the biggest challenges facing society today. In Athens alone, the total amount of airborne pollutants reaches almost 28,000 tons per day, but city buses account for almost 45% of these. This vehicle will be the first production-ready vehicle with a battery pack. Over the next years, more similar vehicles will be produced. Voula is taking the first step to achieve a much cleaner city in the Mediterranean area. "This city bus is the first production-ready vehicle with a battery pack. Over the next years, more similar vehicles will be produced. This is a significant achievement. We are taking the first step to achieve
