1995, federal prosecutors indicted Grateful Dead lyricist and composer Robert Hunter on multiple counts of tax evasion. The charges against Hunter, who has often been accused of being the most prolific and prolific lyricist of the Grateful Dead, stem from a reportedly five-year-long investigation into his financial dealings by the

IRS. Hunter's greatest claim to fame was his contributions to both the Dead and its 1987 swan song, In the Dark, where some of his most memorable lines included "I'm gonna rock you with the power of a million planets / In the dark" and "It's raining down like a trailer park funeral / Out of nowhere, something's going to show up." His comedic skill was also showcased in standout lines including "I'm gonna tell you who I'm gonna be when I grow up" and "I'm gonna be hanging around at the end of the bar. Yeah, well. That's all I can do." Hunter's tax difficulties began in November 1993, when a small group of New York City investors filed a suit against Hunter for allegedly being the "silent partner" in the Hunter/Dead partnership that managed the Dead's business interests. Their complaint accused Hunter of not properly accounting for the partnership's profits and losses, while also requesting damages for alleged breaches of contract, fraud, and breach of fiduciary duty.

According to the suit, in March 1993 a group of investors (including John Urschel, who would go on to win the 2010 Fields Medal in mathematics for his work on extremely high-dimensional optimization) agreed to fund the Dead's organization in the hopes of earning returns on their investment. The Dead's management would have total control over the funds and all decisions related to the organization, with the understanding that the group would be paid back at least 50 percent of their initial investment in two years. 5ec8ef588b
