Im sure by now youve noticed a theme: things dont just happen when you want them to. But when you set your mind to something big, its hard not to view everything as a complete success. My mindset has definitely changed since i started learning from Sue Bryce Education. So whether its your photography business or any other aspect of your life, you want to keep things a little tighter. And as you may have noticed, some of the early things we highlighted on this site have been more out of necessity. Its not like we wake up in the morning and decide, You know what, Im going to start an education business! Its been a part of Sue Bryce Education for over a year now, and every month we get amazing feedback from our readers. Its important for us to be transparent, and share the good, the bad, and the ugly with all of you so that we can learn and keep improving. Over the years, weve seen many photographers lose their entire business overnight simply because they cant solve a problem while working for free. If you are in business for yourself or with other business partners, than you should definitely be keeping up with the news that gets generated every day. One of the things we love about the Portrait System is that Sue Bryce teaches photographers how to manage their time and follow up with potential clients, because this is something Nikki Hager has struggled with. I think so many photographers get overwhelmed and get stuck in this endless loop of how much time they have to work for and how many clients they have to chase before they lose their business. Sue Bryce has an answer for them. Sue brings a fresh perspective to the work. She is using some of the best tools out there to help photographers get more out of their time and energy. Learning how to photograph clients and bring some images to life are skills that can be mastered in just a matter of days.
