the evidence of the serial interval of the disease has been accepted by several studies with different mathematical approaches [5, 13]. an early study reported that the average serial interval is 5.6 days [14]. in an observational study, the median serial interval of covid-19 was estimated to be 6.5days [15]. another study reported that the mean serial interval was estimated to be 6.7days [16]. it is important to take into consideration that the serial interval and incubation period are closely linked, as they are influenced by each other. it is likely that the more prolonged the incubation period, the longer the serial interval will be. the mechanism underlying the serial interval and the incubation period is unclear [17]. in addition to the effects of the incubation period, which includes both acquired and innate immune response and an asymptomatic period, clinical course of the disease, such as manifestation of disease severity, should also influence the serial interval and incubation period. a previous study reported that the average serial interval of the patients with mild, moderate, and critical covid-19 was estimated to be 5.86, 7.67, and 10.21days, respectively [18]. considering the clinical course of the patients infected with covid-19, we assumed that more severe patients will have higher probability of developing symptoms earlier.

therefore, the incubation period can be considered as a function of the severity of the disease. therefore, we used monte carlo simulations to estimate the incubation period and serial interval of covid-19 for the most severe case (i.e., mild, moderate, and critical cases) and the least severe case (i., mild case).
