I want to have some method, like this: `class A(object): def my_method(self, x: int, y: string, z: float): pass` then i will do this: `a = A() a.my_method(10, 'abc', 2.0)` And python3 will resolve this automatically to something like that: `a.my_method(10, str('abc'), 2.0)` Do i really need to define class A with special constructors? Is it possible to somehow define a class in a parameter list? My main goal is to be able to build classes with function in parameter list. A: Python doesn't have this kind of assignment for function parameters Instead you can use the descriptor protocol `def my_method(self, x: int, y: str, z: float): pass` class A: `@classmethod def my_method(cls, x, y, z): pass` Modes of vascular proliferation in human subretinal neovascularization.
