S. Vimal, .The U.S. Justice Department has set a deadline of today for the Bush administration to either respond publicly or be declared in contempt of court for the illegal program of eavesdropping on U.S. citizens without warrants. The deadline is the first in a series of what is expected to be lengthy proceedings in federal court over the warrantless surveillance program by the government, which began under President Bush's father in 2001 and has continued under his administration. A three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit ruled 2-1 on December 21 that it would hold a public briefing in the case in January, and that the Justice Department would be in contempt of court if it did not provide a "detailed plan for securing the records and information sought" by the plaintiffs, including major telecommunications companies that are central to the surveillance program. The Justice Department has appealed that ruling, and until the appeals process is completed, is subject to possible contempt proceedings, says attorney J. Kenneth Robinson, who represents civil liberties groups and telecommunications companies involved in the case. While legal experts say there is a likelihood that the Justice Department will be held in contempt at some point in the proceedings, "I don't think we'll see a contempt citation as a result of what the administration is doing," says Gregory Nojeim, senior counsel for the Freedom, Defense and Electronics Information Coalition. "The good news is that we know the administration, at least the top people in the administration, don't want to hide it. I think they are really feeling the heat and hoping that the Court of Appeals will rule that they should be held in contempt," Nojeim says. The DOJ chose not to respond publicly to the appellate court ruling. The Justice Department and DOJ Inspector General Michael Horowitz are conducting a study of the warrantless surveillance program, but that isn't expected to be completed by October 2, when the appellate court is scheduled to issue its final ruling. "There is going to be pressure to get this down to a place
