Some nights you watch a team get rolled and nothing in particular sticks out. On this night, however, it was a player that stood out. After losing to the Detroit Pistons on Monday night, the Sixers faced the New York Knicks on

Wednesday night at the Wells Fargo Center. And as part of their rotation, the Sixers brought in 2013 first rounder, Iman Shumpert. Shumpert saw some minutes early in the game, playing just under 23 minutes, but for the most part, he was a reserve. But as the game wore on and the Sixers' lead shrunk, Shumpert would have an impact on the game. At the beginning of the third quarter, New York's Carmelo Anthony took a shot at a cut, wide open Paul Millsap. The shot bounced off Millsap, but Shumpert, his defender, tried to cut Anthony off and deny him the shot. As Anthony tried to catch the ball and take another shot, Shumpert would not let him. He battled him down court, kept him from getting open, and challenged his shot, forcing him to shoot a contested jumper that clanged off the side of the backboard. As you can see, Shumpert does not have the best jump shot in the world, but he always gets to the rim and never gives up on a shot. And that's the big thing: he never gives up on a shot. Sure, he has issues finishing at the rim, but he's relentless on the drive. Shumpert, much like Joel Embiid
