A succession of hits like Gone with the Wind (1939), The Grapes of Wrath (1940) and How Green Was My Valley (1941) were interspersed with years when Hollywood's studio bosses were more concerned with saving money than making movies. All this led to a titanic war between unionised actors and directors on one side, and Hollywood moguls on the other. In the early days of the American labour movement, actors' unions had been more powerful than directors' guilds – until they got embroiled in a bitter dispute with the Hollywood studios in 1936. By the time the last major studio boss, Louis B Mayer, died in 1953, a bitter standoff had emerged between the actors' unions and the studios. The American Federation of Motion Picture Artists, led by its president Ronald Reagan, had won significant concessions and moved on to the creation of the Screen Actors Guild, but a new generation of stars, including Charlton Heston, had begun to take control of their careers. By the time the SAG went on strike, in 2002, it had a new president, a retired actor called Ed Asner. The SAG had already won the biggest victory in its fight for equal pay for women and men. But the studio bosses had made the biggest concession of all – they were willing to grant an eight-figure lump sum, which they had been resisting for years. And that meant, crucially, that they would not have to break their production schedules to meet the actors' demands. This, in turn, meant that the SAG would not be able to hold out for equal pay for leading men. And no major actor would accept the SAG's half-baked plan to meet that demand anyway. A few days before the strike began, the SAG held

It should be a relatively short animation. (Let's say 10 frames total) I have the sprite sheet ready to go, with the only thing I need is animation. So all you have to do is animate the single frame and add it to my video. The animation doesn't have to be perfect, but it needs to be recognizable as a single frame. Requirements: 1. You need to animate a single frame from a sprite sheet. 2. The animation should be cute or cute-ish. 3. The animation needs to
