Field of the Invention This invention relates to a semiconductor integrated circuit, and particularly to a technique which is effective when applied to a semiconductor integrated circuit which includes a memory and a logic circuit as mixed elements. 2. Description of Related Art MOS integrated circuits have been more and more integrated recently to make semiconductor integrated circuits of higher integration. To achieve a higher integration, it is necessary to make the element size smaller. However, if the size of the element is made smaller, the characteristics of the element are degraded. In particular, when a DRAM (Dynamic Random Access Memory) is highly integrated, the cycle time of memory access must be shortened and the characteristics of the peripheral circuit including access circuits are degraded. To achieve a high integration, it is important to suppress the degradation in the characteristics of the elements. In addition, the operation speed of a CPU (Central Processing Unit) depends on the peripheral circuits such as a DRAM. In other words, the operation speed of the CPU depends largely
